This course is a survey of the history of women and religion in the U.S. from the colonial period to the present. The primary focus is on women who practice the Christian faith, but some attention is given to women in other religions. Students will explore the contributions of women to the development and expression of religions. Students will gain deeper understanding of the complex relationships among society, religion, culture. They will acquire greater ability to articulate ways that these relationships have impacted, and been impacted by, the lives of women.

Some Suggested Additional Reading:

Attendance Policy:

Attendance is mandatory. Phillips Theological Seminary policy states that any student who misses as much as 20 percent of the contact hours cannot receive a passing grade for the course. Thus, a student with three absences will fail.

Academic Honesty:

Every student is bound by the policies of the seminary regarding academic honesty, as expressed in the PTS Student Handbook. They will be enforced with regard to both exams and writing assignments. Any student who is not absolutely certain how to distinguish between appropriate use of sources and plagiarism should rectify that at once. Paraphrasing another author's work does not necessarily negate an obligation to cite that author as the source of an idea, viewpoint, or piece of information. On the other hand, citing a source does not relieve you of the responsibility to include all quotations within quotation marks. If you are in doubt as to whether you are plagiarizing, find out. I am available at the stated office hours or by appointment, and will respond to specific queries. My default penalty for any act of plagiarism is failure for the entire course.

Accommodations for Individuals with Disabilities:

Should you have any disability which requires that special accommodation be made, notify me during the first week of classes. Phillips Theological Seminary is committed to providing equal access to its programs of graduate professional education for all qualified students with learning, physical, medical, and/or psychological disabilities.
The seminary aims to provide reasonable accommodation for qualified individuals with a disability (based on clinical documentation) to ensure their access and participation in seminary programs. For details, see "Disabilities Policies and Procedures" in the Student Handbook. (The Student Handbook is also located on the PTS website, www.ptstulsa.edu. Go to the Worship & Community tab in the far left column; select Student Handbook.) Please contact Belva Brown Jordan, the Associate Dean for Admissions and Student Services, for consultation.

Class Requirements:

Each student will write and read in class a paper on the assigned reading for one session, with dates listed in the “Reading Assignments” section of the final syllabus. Each paper should be at least four pages and no more than five pages in length; it should be typed, double-spaced in a 12-point font, on paper with regular margins.

There will be a final exam which will be a take-home test. It will be based on lectures, classroom presentations and assigned readings (even if these readings are not directly discussed in class). A portion of the writing for this document will draw upon your reflections about the class. You may therefore choose to keep an informal journal during the course of the semester which could assist you in the production of your exam. A way of focusing this journal which might prove to be helpful would be to think periodically about this portion of the course objectives: “Students will gain deeper understanding of the complex relationships among society, religion, culture. They will acquire greater ability to articulate ways that these relationships have impacted, and been impacted by, the lives of women.”

The third learning measurement tool, the written paper or presented project, will be discussed and decided upon at the first class session.

This formula will be used for determining your final grade:

Attendance/Participation in Discussion Sessions - 10%
Paper on Readings - 30%
Paper/Project - 30%
Take-Home Exam - 30%
