Information about inquiring student admission (For Master of Divinity Degree Program)

The Inquiring Student admission category is designed especially for Christian Church (Disciples of Christ), Presbyterian, United Church of Christ, United Methodist or Evangelical Lutheran Church of America prospective students who believe they may want to prepare for ordained ministry but would like more information and seminary experience before entering into the formal denominational channels for ministerial preparation.

Inquiring Students follow regular admissions procedures for the Master of Divinity program, with the exception of the denominational reference form. Prospective Inquiring Students may ask their pastor to complete this form. Inquiring Student admission is effective for one year. Financial aid will be granted to Inquiring Students for this period, utilizing the same categories as are used for degree-seeking students.

During the year of inquiry, the student is expected to meet with the Phillips Theological Seminary denominational formation director of his/her denomination and with the appropriate judicatory representative. If the student begins seminary in the fall, s/he must provide a denominational reference from the appropriate judicatory representative by April 1 of the following year. If the student begins seminary in the spring, the denominational reference must be provided by November 1. The denominational reference should be mailed to the Department of Admissions. At that time, the student will be considered for full acceptance into the Master of Divinity degree program.

Although admission as an Inquiring Student does not guarantee acceptance into the Master of Divinity program at Phillips Theological Seminary or into the candidacy program of a particular denomination, this admission category should meet a need for those students who would like a sample of theological education and more experience with judicatory procedures before making the formal decision to prepare for ordained ministry.

If, at the end of the year of inquiry, the student is unable to provide a recommendation from a denominational official, s/he may apply for admission to the Master of Arts in Ministry and Culture or Master of Theological Studies program. Admission to these degree programs requires a reference from a pastor, but not from a district or regional denominational official.
